

An Overview of
Somerset County
Government
Programs & Services

HISTORY

- New Jersey is the only state where elected county officials are called “freeholders” (most other states elect a county commission or county council).
- The term “freeholder” is a carryover from colonial days, when only property owners -- then known as freeholders -- were entitled to vote.
- Originally, one freeholder represented each municipality. As counties grew, this became too unwieldy. Today, Somerset County has five freeholders elected at-large for three-year terms. Each freeholder represents the entire county. Somerset County currently has about 333,750 residents.

WHAT DOES A FREEHOLDER DO?

- Freeholders elect from among themselves a Freeholder Director (Peter S. Palmer-2017) who conducts their meetings and serves as spokesperson for the board. The Freeholder Deputy Director (Patrick Scaglione-2017) fills this role in the director’s absence. In Somerset County, the positions of Freeholder Director and Deputy Director are rotated each year.
- Each freeholder in Somerset County chairs a standing committee:
 - Human Services (Brian D. Levine-2017),
 - Finance & Administrative Services (Mark Caliguire-2017),
 - Public Works (Patrick Scaglione-2017), and
 - Public Health & Safety (Patricia L. Walsh-2017).

The Freeholder Director and County Administrator serve as ex-officio members of each committee.

- The Board of Chosen Freeholders is the policy-making body of county government. They ensure compliance with state mandates, such as recycling and the provision of facilities for the courts and the county jail.
- They also fund many human and social services programs, such as Senior Wellness Centers, Meals on Wheels, a community mental health center and the Office of Veterans Services, among others.
